

In answer to the request of Mr. John Aiken of the Government and Politics Club, Mr. Allen Dulles, Director of Central Intelligence, has designated Mr. [REDACTED] to speak on "The Role of CIA in the Government."

STAT

The lecture, sponsored by the Government and Politics Club, will be given on Tuesday evening, January 15, at 7:30 P.M. in the [REDACTED] and will be open to members of the faculty and the student body.

[REDACTED] has been with the Central Intelligence Agency from its earliest years. His academic background is in Political Theory and Law. He has had varied assignments with the CIA, and at present regularly lectures on the federal intelligence system at the Foreign Service Institute, at various military institutions, and to selected groups throughout the government.

Introducing his subject with a brief consideration of the historical rise of intelligence in America, [REDACTED] presentation will focus on the present structure of the federal intelligence system, the role of the CIA as the coordinator of the government's foreign intelligence activities, and the way in which intelligence supports the policy level of government, particularly the President and the National Security Council.
